

VOLUME 5, NO. 3 Fall 1987

On the Cover

Sorry, no PDF
available

In Kenya, East Africa, a Heart-nosed Bat (Cardioderma cor) zeroes in on its prey, a cricket. Recent experimentation has shown that this species has hearing so sensitive that it can hear a beetle walking on sand from nearly 10 feet away. Their diet consists primarily of insects, but also includes small vertebrates. During the wet season, individuals spend considerable time □singing□ to establish their exclusive foraging territories.

All articles in this issue:

- ▶ BCI Organizes for Expanded Capability
- ▶ Board Elects Officers
- ▶ REVIEW
- ▶ Fruit Bats: Prime Movers of Tropical Seeds
- ▶ India's Samanar Hill Caves Saved
- ▶ Prime Minister of India Enjoys Bat Exhibit
- ▶ Australia's Flying Foxes Still Need Help
- ▶ Medal Awarded to BCI Member
- ▶ Community Bat Awareness Seminars
- ▶ On the Cover